HAVE A GOURD ARBOR

Would you like to have a gourd arbor with gourds hanging down from above, formed by the mystic hand of the nature's culturer in the most fantastic shapes and forms imaginable? To be gazed upon in awe and wonderment at what Mother Nature can produce?

As I am writing this, I am looking upon an arbor about ten feet high, with rows eight feet apart and joined at the top by the ends of the gourd vines and fastened tight to the wires above by their own tendrils or octopus arms.

From above are hanging spherical and globular shapes of the Plebeial Gourd. Like the goblins, they are swaying in the breeze that finds its way through the dense foliage of the gourd vine. It is a sight of beauty and admiration, and a real place of comfort and relaxation in this my arbor of gourds.

When the sun has gone to rest is the time the gourds look their best, for it is then that the blossoms open, for the gourds are night bloomers and bloom at night except for those of the Cucurbita Pepo, which are yellow bloomers and bloom in the day time only.

From the far and strange lands of Mexico, and the far lands of Central and South America, as well as Africa and Asia, the missionary workers have used the gourds, and seeing their great value as household utilities and also their great ornamental value, have, upon coming back to this country, brought gourd seeds with them. It is now no longer necessary to hunt for the seeds all over the globe as we have in this country every gourd and gourd seeds that are worth-while growing, whether it be for curiosity, ornaments, food or utility.

It is simple to grow gourds, I mean the real hard shell lagenaria gourds. They dry hard and stay that way indefinitely, for they have very few pests to bother them and are such fast growers that they outgrow everything in their path and keep on growing sometimes to a length of forty feet. Their vines stretch in all directions, with fruit high and low and never bothered by pests. This fruit, or the gourds, when perfectly dry, can be cut, carved, polished, painted or decorated and made into hundreds of useful and ornamental articles which find ready market wherever they are shown and are greatly sought as souvenirs.

To you, my dear reader, I will say: "Grow some Gourds for pleasure and profit."

My dear customer:

If you were able to come to my gourd studio you would wish that you would have known something about gourds long ago, for you would be astonished to see so many beautiful articles made from gourds with hardly any tools or machinery, depending mostly upon the nature or the different kinds, shapes, patterns and designs. Each individual article is the art of nature with the finishing touches of the artistic hand.

The great opportunity that is open to those who will take advantage of this new enterprise is beyond imagination, for in the near future the gourds grown by American farmers and finished by American artists will displace the cheap foreign merchandise in our stores.

It is my sincere desire to see those days when American products will be used in American homes.

You will receive the greatest pleasure and satisfaction when you play and assist nature in growing your own gourds, and then your fun begins by transforming these cucurbitas into the art and beauty of your dreams.

You can put the finishing touch to your love charm, center piece or fruit bowl with seed pods you may be lucky enough to find on trees or shrubs growing in your vicinity or you can grow your own.

Grow your gourds for pleasure and profit,

Sincerely yours,

John Ciesla
